merely a variation in the amount of currency of a speculative phenomenon incident to a great and sudden advance in the value of an important commodity, by causing an appreciation of silver as measured in gold, and a sudden advance in the value of gold as measured in silver. The silver provided the true protection to our agriculturists. And the inference to be drawn from these facts are plain. If the silver provided the true protection to our agriculturists, it is safe to argue that activity such as we have not witnessed in years in the market for silver will follow all lines and ramifications.

It is reported here that one effect of the silver has been a stimulation of silver mining in Mexico. Old mines, for years unused, are being pumped out and put into shape for renewed work with improved methods and apparatus. Companies are being formed for the construction of smelters, so that silver ore can be mined and refined on Mexican soil and sent over in bars and ingots.

SCARCITY OF MONEY.

The Straggle Believed to be of Only Short Duration.

New York, August 21st.—A prominent financial writer says in the Post this afternoon. The fact is that money was scarce in the market, concurrent with a reduction in the Bank of England rate of discount from 4 to 3 percent in London, and that all the time for the last week or two while money has been ranging from 10 to 30 percent in London, and that the fact that this enormous difference in rates has not caused any movement of money this week, or caused any considerable change in the rates for money, is an anomaly which is difficult to account for, except upon the theory that people who could have transferred money enough from London to have relieved this market have believed the stringency here was only temporary, and that for the short time in which they would get high rates for money it would not pay to bring it here.

There is an excellent reason for money all over the country, and before there is any denied relief to the New York market there will necessarily be a decided break in the exchange rate which will bring back some of the gold sent out one month ago. The total stock of silver bullion in the United States is $7,000,000,000.

which Rauz took the stand. Witness denied that any employee of the Office, or himself, ever owned stock in the Refractory Company, and consequently the charge that employee ownership was proved. Because of the ownership was false. Cooper then demanded to see the books of the company, but Rauz refused to produce them. He was willing that members of the committee should inspect the stock-book of the company, but not that it should go into the hands of Rauz. Rauz said Cooper gave the press everything he got hold of, and had made public documents intended to bring up the matter in the Committee on Rules. Cooper insisted upon seeing the books himself, and upon the committee refusing, entered upon his books and papers and left the room. The committee then resumed investigation on its own hook.

Committee Rauz said he had borrowed $12,000 upon the endorsement of George O. Lemon, and renewed the note from time to time. The investigation company was organized last January, and was composed of men of high standing. He never gave priority to any claims of Lemon or any other attorney. Rauz was anxious to have his cases before the pension office pushed along. He presented a number of cases, but they were not taken up. Rauz reported to be ready for action. The witness was asked to make up twenty-five or thirty cases and present his views. This was done.

The witness presented Lemon's letter to the committee and it was read. It was dated November 16th last, and expressed the hope that the Bureau would begin the practice of considering such complete cases immediately. The letter was referred to the Deputy Commissioner for a report. He reported against the plan, and no action was made on, either written or verbal, for taking up Lemon's cases in advance of the regular order.

Rauz said that after further examination and consideration of the matter he, on December 23d, issued an order concerning the complete files on which were put the cases that seemed to be most complete and ready for adjudication. This had the effect of greatly expediting the cases. Captain Lemon had nothing to do, as asserted, with the preparation of this or any subsequent order.

Representative Cooper was requested by the committee to return and resume connection with the case, which he did, and the committee adjourned.
